Admiralty-office, January 3, 1780.

APTAIN Marshall, of his Majesty's ship Emerald, arrived late last night from Captain Fielding, with an account of his having fallen in with a steet of Dutch merchant ships, under convoy of the Admiral Count Byland, with a fquadron of five ships and frigates of war.

Captain-Fielding defired permission to visit the merchant ships, which was refused. Upon sending his boats to visit them, they were fired at; upon which he fired a shot a head of the Dutch Admiral, who returned a broadlide; Captain Fielding slid the like; and then the Dutch immediately flruck their colours.—Such of the merchant ships as have naval flores on board were flopt; and the Dutch Admiral told, that he was at liberty to hoift his colours and profecute He accepted the former, and faluted, but declined the latter; and is coming, with the ships that were under his convoy, to Spithead.

It is supposed that Mess. we were under great burthens; but as the petition stated a misapplication of public money, Parliament would expect some proof of this: For his part, he had it only from common report.

"Mr Drummand seconded Mr Cholmiey; and, recommending moderation and unanimity, said, that an expenditure of public money was subject to constitutional, control by Parliament; that if any men have misapplied it, let that control be made use of. Striking off penfions, &cc. is plausible in theory, but difficult in practice. He desired to know who was to be censor, who was to judge of the merit of pensoners, and draw the line. He stated our late soccesses as a prelude to future, and that they shewed us still the terror of our enemies. He thought this a time to stimulate Government to more effectual measures; would wish to try one year more, for that Britain might in that space would will to try one year more, for that Britain might in that space revive again; and therefore declared he would give a negative to the pe-

" Mr Pritchard faid he envied the fituation of the two last gentlemen, "Mr Pritchard faid he envied the fituation of the two last gentlemen, who feemed to be the only persons that were exempt from the distresses of the nation, and ignorant of its calamities. One of them had asked who was to be the censor? He would answer the question—The people, the oppressed people were to be the censor. He prosessed himself attached to his King, but selt himself bound by stronger ties of duty to his country. Proofs had been called for—Could stronger proofs be given than the last campaign? or even than the last Gazette Extraordinary indeed? Let any gentleman produce a single instance where wise measures had been concepted, and carried into effect, and he would give up his opinion. He instanced America and Ireland, where the Lord Lieutenant had been obliged to individuals for the pay of the forces which desended the kingdom. Was it love for Ireland that made Lord North to anxious to hurry the Irish bills through Parliament? No—it was 64,000 bayonets pointed to his breast. How did we know that the new supplies would be expended to better purpose than the last? the new supplies would be expended to better purpose than the last? He then prefessed himself unconnected with party, and hoped, if our petition was rejected, we shall shew that we had still spirit to affect our

Mr Smelt requested the indulgence of the meeting, and their candid "Mr Smell requested the induspence of the meeting, and their candid Interpretation of argaments, which his want of skill and experience might fail to arrange with judgment, or place in their proper point of siew. He said, that the adversionemt to call the county together was figured by many respectable names; he came to York with a confident hope, that their intellion was to propose some measures for the promotion of the common candel and to unite the minds of men in the hour of differs; but that he lambanted to find, that, instead of contributions to the support of confidents the intention arowed was to discuss the support of contributions to the support of contributions are supported by the supported by the support of contributions are supported by the support of supported by the support of supported by the support of supported by the supp hour of diffres; but that he lamented to find, that, instead of contributing to the support of government; the intention avowed was to divide its strength; for that the ground of the petition seemed to be to curb the influence of the Crown, and to prevent the Sovereign from disposing of the revenues granted to him by Parliament; a measure by which, he apprehended, the latest posterity might be sensibly affected. He then desired to shew his own consistency by a detail of the circumstances of his life, and related that he had early engaged in, and after 19 years faithful service retired from a profession, without accepting any reward or pension, as an illness, not contracted in service, but which had grown up with him from his insacy, had occasioned his defire to resign. He took occasion here to resiect on the neglected state of the navy, and weak condition of the works at Plymouth, when he was calnavy, and weak condition of the works at Plymouth, when he was cal-led on, in his official character, to inspect them in the course of the laft war. During his retirement, of which this city was the feene, he affirmed that he had dedicated his time to the study of our constitution, affirmed that he had dedicated his time to the Itildy of our confittuous, and other national objects: That while, in this fituation, he received a call to a most important duty, for the faithful, though inadequate discharge of which, while in employment, he was well pleased to receive his wages; but that, on the conclusion of his attendance upon the Princes, which he refigned from a sense of his own inability, he had declined the offer of an annuity for the remainder of his life: That he therefore once more retired to his own natural and humble fituation, whence he was again drawn by the commands of his most gracious Management. whence he was again drawn by the commands of his most gracious Mafter; tilt whether the stipend he had from that time enjoyed was to be confirmed into a pehsion, he could not tell, and was now even indifferent, for that from this moment he refigned it, " and now taid he, I " am an independent man." He then reproduced the petition to the House of Commons, as it tended to make the King no longer the judge House of Commons, as it tended to make the King no longer the judge of his own benevolence, but to constitute Parliament his guardians; and declared it even illegal for one branch of the constitution to interfere with the operations of another. He affirmed that the power of the Crown was by no means exorbitant; that on the contrary it required to be greatly increased; that the King's influence was too little, and that his hands wanted to be strengthened, for that he is not able to curb the licentioniness with which he is every day talked of in every company, and in every street; nor even to restrain the infertion of a news-paper paragraph, while the present measures tended to anarchy and confusion, and to suatch away that facred veil which the constitution had wisely drawn round the Crown, and which only the greatest occasion should remove from before the splendor of Majethy. That such was the delicacy of the Legislature at the time of the Revolution, that the word abdication was a work of three days deliberation, their object the word abdication was a work of three days deliberation, their object being to obtain the immortality of the Royal Person, a person upon which the law hath believed not only an exemption from death, but from error; that in this maxim "The King can do no wrong," the only fateguard of the people is contained, and that from his protection alone their liberty is to be derived: He therefore recommended it to those who were in pursuit of liberty, that they would implore the protection of the King, as by protection and security liberty was to be underflood.

He now entered on the comparative merits of the prefent Adminifiration, and those who conducted the affairs of the nation on Whige principles, and hence again deduced the propriety of giving greater power to the Crown. He averred, that, in the days of Whiggins, the Minister, distinct from the Crown, formed a fourth branch of Legislature, which had absorbed within itielf the power and office of the Crown, and that leaving de Jure Royalty to be possessed by the Royal Person, the party of the Minister assumed and exercised the office of the King de Fusto. The narrow principles of self actuated the measures and purfuits of Whigs, hence the complaints of our brethren in Ireland have been somented, and hence the rebellion in America grew to so stupends. He now entered on the comparative merits of the prefent Adminibeen fomented, and hence the rebellion in America grew to fo stupendous a height, that it was irrefishable almost at the first. Lotd Chatham, ous a height, that it was irrefilable almost at the fost. Lord Chatham, he granted, was formed to glare a meteor in a storm, but by no means to conduct finances in the time of peace; and declared, that the present increase of debt arises from that want of foresight, which, in peace, never looks forward toward the exigencies of war; adding, that one of the greatest misfortunes of this country is, that no Minister is found sufficiently firm to keep up the taxes on the return of peace to the greatest height of a war establishment; [Here the whole meeting expressed the utmost dispersion] for if that were done, provision might be made against the day of danger, and we should not, in the hour of pressing necessity, be obliged to purchase every requisite article at the most exorbitant prices; and here recurring to the crimination of Whiggiss, he affirmed, that, if the last war had broke out two years later, we should not have had a sleet fit for fivice.

affirmed, that, if the last war had broke out two years later, we should not have had a seet fit for service.

"He now directly undertook to exculpate Government from the charge of having occasioned the calamities complained of, and transferred the blame to the people, whom he called the slaves of felsishness, which descended even to the election of coroners; to them alone he afferibed the disorders of the country. He denied the existence of one patriot. After admitting the possible truth of Lord Oriord's affertion. That all men had their prices, he affirmed that if there he a patriot in this country he is now upon the Throne: "The King is not only the greatest and the best, but, he was forry to say, he believed him to be the only patriot in this country." He called to recollection a former meeting of the county of York, and lamented that the affembly presenteed on him to dissolve the Parliament for excluding a man, whose private character none would be so bold as to vindicate; whereas, on the present occasion, Parliament is to be called on to restrain the King; he, therefore, belought the meeting, by every obligation that could infinfent occasion, Parliament is to be called on to restrain the King; he, therefore, befought the meeting, by every obligation that could influence the lover of his country, from every principle of public and private interest, from the loyalty and affection due to the most gracious Prince engaged in a war the most just that ever was entered into, to reject the petition, and to feek for the redress of our calamities from means in our own power to carry into effect. Let reformation begin with the body of the people. The principles of electors were corrupt; let them return to virtue, and let them choose for representatives discreet and dispassionate men; such men as are recommended to their choice by the writ of election. The only ground on which the petition could pretend to propriety, he faid, was on an opinion that the King is the fervant of the people; and, now returning to the Royal Attributes, added, that this is a narrow, a little, and a mean idea: He is not the fervant of the people; he is their foul; he is the foul of the Constitution: From him, and him alone the Constitution derives its energy: From him alone the operations of the State derive their efficacy: he is the life, the soul, the very existence of the Constitution. And here, recommending once more the rejection of the petition, he prosessed his readiness to join. once more the rejection of the petition, he professed his readiness to join in an address to the Throne, expressive of loyalty, confidence, contribu-tion of strength, and co-operation, &c. &c.

"Mr Turner succeeded to Mr Smelt, for whom he expressed the warm-est affection as his friend and his relation; he nevertheless lamented the influence of a Court upon the sentiments of a man, whom he had alinfluence of a Court upon the fentiments of a man, whom he had always confidered before as a friend to liberty, and a zealous enemy to every specious of corruption. He did not doubt but that fome part of Mr Smelt's charge against Whig Administrations might be true, because a Whig in power was very often like a Tory. He now read a long, a very long list of pensions and exorbitant falaries, and declared, that even the proxies of the Lords, whom he called the Upper House of corruption, had their prices. He afferted, therefore, the right of the people to demand an account of the money which they had themselves granted, and fold, that, however impracticable, it was constitutional that one branch of Legislature should control another. That the Grown had obtained an excessive influence, he would not say that the King had, for he censured and lamented the indelicacy of Mr Smelt, in having brought his person into the question; but he again averted, that the influence of the Crown was such as to have bought up the representatives, and taken away from the people all their natural power 4 that tatives, and taken away from the people all their nati to contradict this was a mean State hypocrify, a meer cloak the juggling of popery, was used only to cover snares and every other

" Mr Hill rose next; he objected to Mr Smelt's direct mention of the royal name, as difrespectful to the King in bringing it forward, when his Ministers only came under the censure of the Assembly; and indelicate to the meeting, as tending to intimidate his hearts. The King, he doubted not, might be a patriot; it was the undue influence of his Ministers that excited our indignation; it was their misconduct that was universally selt. He acknowledged Mr Smelt's affertion that we want protection from the Crown: The loss of half of our dominions, and the wretched state of the remainder, too clearly prove the do want protection. He averred that the majority in the House of mons was maintained by an undue influence, and that as to the felfish principles which, according to Mr Smelt's doctrine, governed the peo-ple, and defeended even to the choice of coroners, they could be more truly objected to Government, who had interferred in elections by Quo Warranto and the disfranchifement of electors. He infranced this in the eafe of Portimouth. By this influence also, which Sir. William Blackflone had pronounced more dangerous than any other firetch of the prerogative, he farther afferted, that even trial by jury (heretofore held facred) was materially affected. He was happy to find an opposition to the petition proposed, and still more so that it came from the narrow outer of the King Friend. the petition proposed, and this more to that it came trom the narrow quarter of the King's Friends, a name affemed by men who were leaft of all entitled to it. He could not very well undeftand Mr Smelt's attack on Whiggifin, as by the operation of Whiggifin the prefent family was feated on the throne. He could eafily infer from it, that Mr Smelt was not (as he had affirmed) of no party, for his sident oppositions. The strong of the

He touched on the profit $8,0001. to Lord Cadogan on a late coinage, and assumed that Dr tranklin had urged this very instance of English extravagance to Holand as a ground for a loan to America. He now thought he had a glot to demand the opinion of Sir George Saville (who represented on knine) upon the enormous instance of the Crown, and called on in to come forward and declare his knowledge on the subject. To the Honourable the Commons of Great Britain in Parliament affection.

Parliament afferibled, The Petition of the Gentlemen, Clergy, and Freeholders of the County of Tork ;

Shenweth "That this nation hath been engaged for feveral years a most expensive and unfortunate war; that many of our aluable Colonies, having actually declared themselves indeendent, have formed a Strict confederacy with France and spain, the dangerous and inveterate enemies of Great Briin; that the confequence of those combined misfortunes ath been, a large addition to the national debt, a heavy acumulation of taxes, a rapid decline of trade, manufactures, and-rents of the kingdom. " Alarmed at the diminished refources and growing burhens of this country, and convinced that rigid frugality is now indiffeentibly necessary in every department of the state, alamitous and impoverified condition of the nation, much mblic money has been improvidently fquandered, and that nany individuals enjoy finecure places, efficient places with xorbitant emoluments, and penfions namerited by public ervice, to a large and faill increasing a nount; whence the Crown has acquired a great and unconstitutional influence, which, if not checked, may foon prove fatal to the liberties of this country.

"Your petitioners conceiving, that the true end of every legitimate government is not the emolument of any individual, but the welfare of the community; and confidering, hat, by the constitution of this realm, the national purse is intrusted, in a particular manner, to the custody of this honourable House, beg leave further to represent, that until effectual measures be taken to redress the oppressive grievances herein stated, the grant of any additional sum of public money, beyond the produce of the prefent taxes, will be injurious to the rights and property of the people, and dero-gatory from the honour and dignity of Parliament.

"Your petitioners, therefore, appealing to the justice-of this honourable House, do most earnestly request, that before any new burtliens are laid upon this country, effectual measures may be taken by this House to inquire into and correct the gross abuses in the expenditure of public money; to reduce all exorbitant emoluments; to refeind and abolish all finecure places and unmerited penfious; and to appropriate the produce to the necessities of the state, in such manner as to the wildom of Parliament shall feem meet.

And your petitioners shall ever pray, &c. After which the following refolutions were proposed, and also unanimoully agreed to, viz.

The Resolved, That the petition now read to this meeting, addressed to the House of Commons, and requesting that before any new burthens be laid upon the country, effectual measures may be taken by that House to inquire into and correct the gross abuses in the expenditure of public money; to reduce all exorbitant emolaments; to refeind and abolish all finecure places and unmerited pensions; and to appropriate the produce to the necessities of the state, is approved by this meeting.
